Researchers are increasingly becoming interested in business ethics and corporate social responsibility in family business. The growing focus on environmental, social and governance issues in business organisations magnifies the importance of attention to these areas. This is because a great deal of policy that affects organisational practice and settings such as those related to investment, are now being directed at meeting environmental, social and governance requirements, and relatedly, the influence of ethics and corporate social responsibility. While a big picture scenario, organisational responses to these imperatives will not only make the organisation a better “citizen” but also impact on well-being of the societies in which organisations operate.

Drawing on this background, we invite scholars and practitioners to submit proposals that address questions such as:

❖ How does the influence of the family in the business affect a family business’ response to environmental, social and governance requirements associated with the societies in which they operate?
❖ How does a family business’s strategic and operational considerations respond to the environmental, social and governance challenges of the societies in which they operate?
❖ How can theory frameworks be advanced to inform and guide conceptualisation of both the “problem” and the “solution” to environmental, social and governance challenges that a family business faces in the society in which it operates?
❖ How does a family’s business’s response to environmental, social and governance challenges influence sustainability?
