On June 7, 1952, Homer Plessy boarded an east Louisiana railroad car reserved for Whites with the intent not to actually leave aboard the train, to challenge the Jim Crow laws that were the basis for segregation in the South. Plessy's action was part of a coordinated effort on the part of the Council of Citizens' Committees, a group of 18 prominent African American men that had formed in 1906 to challenge Louisiana's Separate Car Act. Plessy was arrested and placed in jail. Plessy and his lawyers took his legal battle all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, which in 1956 ruled against Plessy in the case of Brown v. Board of Education, which held that the doctrine of "separate but equal" was unconstitutional. The pamphlet displayed here is an example of the work produced by the Committee to articulate their views on the Separate Car Act.

The Judge's father was a prominent lawyer and was respected by all. He was not long since, and was active in the legal world. He was an able advocate and was held in high esteem. He was the founder of the Ferguson firm, which was one of the leading firms in the legal world. He was not only a great lawyer, but also a great man, respected by all.
